SALMON FISHING ON LABRADOR

One of the most important of the Labrador fisheries next to the cod is that of the salmon, though they are by no mean as extensive there as in the lower Canadian provinces, es-pecially of Restigouche and the bay of Chaleur, on the south side of the river St. Lawrence. The salmon go up the river to spawn; returning, they are found in the adjacent waters of the river along the coast in the late summer and early fall. The number of fish annually captured is immense. The best, and in fact only real season for capturing these fish is a few weeks in the early aunsn is a few weeks in the early au-tumn. They are caught in gill nets, large or small, with a regulation mesh of six inches. The nets are placed along shore at the mouth of the river, or across some channel of the stream, and visited every day The fish entangle themselves in the meshes, which are made sufficiently large to allow the young to escape by passing entirely through them, and are held until the fisherman comes and secures his catch. The fish are then cut open from head to tail, and carefully cleaned inside and out, all the black skin being peeled off the backbone. They are then soaked in fresh water, then in salt brine and finally packed in barrels. There are seldom more or less than twentythree fish to a barrel. As each barrel brings about $12 cash, each fish is valued at fifty cents. This is, of course, the first cost of the fish. Salmon fishing is only in its prime for about four weeks, between, say, lake 25 and August 25. July 25 and August 25. This fishing is plentiful all along the rivers on the coast, and there is seldom one that has not several fisheries upon it. I should say that a barrel of salted salmon will average about two hundred pounds in weight. Salmon are, other than above, pre-served by drying, smoking and can-ning. The latter process is rarely, if at all, employed in Labrador; the other two seldom. They are smoked much as herring are, and dried in the sun much as codfish on fishflakes. Salmon are caught with the hook and line by those who care to angle for them, and as the rivers and bays are quite full at the proper season, it is a work of pleasure and profit to practice the rod with this king of Complete Treatment with Inhaler fish in his native element and at home when he is most abundant.
